Included description:

"A picture of the new Lake Burien School. This was the first school in the Seahurst area. It originally started in a tent over where Sasanoff architects have their architectural offices, near the post office. A year later, the new school was built with two classrooms at 146th. The old building had a big rock in the yard, and they had to take it out to make room for the new school. The new building was declared surplus and sold to a church school. The school went broke and King County took it over. The land was made into a park so the building was demolished, except for the pieces of the archway and the gargoyles which were saved and incorporated into the park entrance."
